Tuition to rise 20 to 23 percent

By Lance Lovell

Kaimin Legislative Reporter

The prospect of University of Montana students paying big increases in tuition rates over the next two years became more likely while the chances of a state-funded work-study program became more gloomy after action in the Legislature yesterday.

The Joint Subcommittee on Education adopted tuition increases for full-time students of 22.6 percent for residents and 19.5 percent for non-residents.

In addition, subcommittee member Rep. Gene Donaldson, R-Helena, said the state probably won't be able to fund a $3 million work-study program, which was part of a $6.2 million program modification request submitted by the Montana State Board of Regents.

Donaldson made his prediction after a press conference called by the House minority leadership, which is concerned about expected losses in oil and coal tax revenues caused by falling world oil prices.

House Minority Whip Jack Ramirez warned that the state cannot afford to fund all new budget requests and challenged the Democratic House leadership to take steps to begin balancing the budget.

Ramirez said the Legislature could cause a state budget deficit of $52.4 million if legislators are not careful while allocating state funds.

Dan Kemmis, house majority leader, said after the conference that Ramirez's figures were accurate and legislators could spend much more than is available if they are not careful.

Kemmis did say, however, that deficit spending is unlikely to occur because legislators are bound by the state constitution to submit a balanced budget by the end of the session.

Specifically, the GOP leadership questioned Democrats about how they intend to fund new programs such as Gov. Ted Schwinden's $6.6 million Build Montana Program when oil and coal tax revenue is predicted to keep falling.

Kemmis later said the Democrats will put as many options as are available before Montanans while considering ways to balance the budget.

He also said raising taxes will not be ruled out by the Democrats.

Rep. Bob Marks, house minority leader, said he is glad this situation has come up because it will force legislators to spend money only on priority programs.

He said state government has continued to grow over the past decade because legislators had enough money to keep adding state programs.

Donaldson, who also spoke at the conference, said the Subcommittee on Education will probably give priority funding to the new space fund, which provides money for the maintenance and operation of new university system buildings completed during the biennium.

The subcommittee will take action Friday on the regents' requested program modifications.

If the Legislature were to adopt the subcommittee's proposed tuition increases, full-time resident students would pay $531 for the 1983-84 school year and $585 for the 1984-85 school year.

Non-resident full-time students would pay $2,007 in tuition next year and $2,205 for the 1984-85 school year.

Spring break air fares lowered

By Melanie Williamson
Kaimin Reporter

With bargain fares available from three airlines flying out of Missoula, spring break may be just the time for students to get away from it all.

Western Airlines started the price wars, Terri Blattspieler of Global Travel said, but Frontier and Northwest airlines have met their $198 round-trip fare to most continental U.S. cities they service.

"The great thing is that they're allowing these fares when students can use them," she said. "Usually the airlines restrict special fares during school breaks, such as Christmas, and during peak travel periods."

The lowered fare is restricted to travel beginning before April 1 with a stay of between seven and fourteen days. The ticket must also be booked and paid for at least one week before travel begins.

Mike Morrison of All Points Travel said "These low fares may be the reason so many students are traveling." The space available is getting tight on some flights, he said, especially "to places where there's sun."

Blattspieler said Western and Frontier airlines are also offering a $99 round-trip fare to Denver or Salt Lake City, but the ticket must be bought by March 3. Morrison said travelers on those flights may stay from one to sixty days and may begin travel anytime; the April 1 deadline is not a restriction in this case.

Since none of the airlines serving Missoula fly to Florida, some students are planning to either drive or fly to Billings and take off for the sun from there, Blattspieler said. By adding the $76 Billings fare to the $198 fare, a flight to Tampa or Miami would be $274, she said.

Fares to Hawaii are now available for less than $500, she said, by taking a $198 flight to Los Angeles and a connecting flight to the islands for a total of $494 for a round-trip ticket.

Flights to Seattle are also discount priced at $156 round trip or $81 one way, Blattspieler said. The round-trip fare is usually over $200.

The discount flights are getting full, Blattspieler said, but getting a flight is "not impossible."

ASUM elections set for today from 9 to 5

Voting tables for ASUM and Montana Public Interest Research Group (MontPIRG) elections will be staffed today from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Lodge, University Center and Liberal Arts Building.

To be eligible to vote, students must have paid the $18 ASUM activity fee.

Computers will be used to monitor the elections. Students will present their University of Montana identification cards to those staffing the computers. The student's I.D. number will then be typed into the computer, which contains a list of student identification numbers.

The numbers of those students who have voted will be removed from the computer list, thus allowing students to vote only once.

Students may choose one of four ASUM ballots to vote on: on-campus, off-campus, Married Student Housing and organized off-campus.

ASUM presidential and vice presidential candidates are: Bruce Baker and Andrea Olsen; David Bolinger and Paula Jellison; Andy Stroble and Matt Mayer.

Students will also elect ten candidates to the MontPIRG board of directors at the same time they vote for ASUM candidates. The MontPIRG candidates will be listed on separate ballots from ASUM candidates.

In addition, students are being asked to fill out a questionnaire when they vote on how they feel about the state work-study program.

Correction

The Central Board candidate profile on Kurt Feiler that appeared in Friday's Kaimin incorrectly stated that Feiler is a member of the Students for an Active Education party. Feiler is a member of the Party for Increased Student Awareness.

Also, Sharleen Pendergrass is an English major, not a geology major as was reported.

Forecast

Cloudy today, scattered rain or snow showers tomorrow. High today 48, low tonight 32, high tomorrow 42. Air quality to be marginal.

Opinions

They're not listening

Ever get the idea that nobody's listening?

There's overwhelming evidence that the majority of U.S. citizens support a bilateral nuclear freeze. Through referendums and opinion polls, people have registered their support for an immediate end to the nuclear arms race.

Kaimin editorial

But our government doesn't seem to be listening. President Ronald Reagan refuses to be swayed by public opinion and continues the arms buildup. This buildup is costing you and me billions of dollars. But the real cost is incalculable. Superiority in arms tends to encourage their use. Most experts say that a rough parity now exists between the Soviet Union and the United States. But Reagan refuses to be swayed by rational logic. His "experts" unconvincedly argue that the United States is behind the Soviets. (They say this in spite of the fact that both sides can destroy each other ten times over). While the insanity of the arms race goes on, the danger that the much feared nuclear holocaust will occur increases.

But, if the majority want the insanity to stop, why isn't it stopping? It's because our government representatives are not listening. And it isn't just the federal government that is failing. Montanans overwhelmingly passed a nuclear freeze initiative (No. 91) last fall. And yet, when a similar resolution was first brought before the Montana Legislature last week, the resolution failed.

They're not listening. But if we take a little time from our busy lives and write and demonstrate, maybe the hardheads will start to ache. And if we start voting and vote for those who take a firm and unequivocal stand in favor of a bilateral nuclear freeze, maybe we'll prevent the final holocaust.

We better start doing more because it's later than we think.

Stroble, Mayer,

Keenan and Keyes

Editor: Andy Stroble, Matt Mayer and I do not always agree. In many areas, the ASUM independence and the funding of certain ASUM groups being foremost, our differences of opinion are wide. An example of this difference concerns the funding of the UM Advocates. I believe that the work of the Advocates should be a university administration responsibility. As such, I would offer the Advocates zero activity fee dollars rather than the near $8,000 they receive. I cannot convince Andy and Matt of this opinion.

Putting differences aside, however, Matt and Andy are the best ASUM presidential candidates. They are hard-working individuals, adept at making decisions, and knowledgeable of ASUM operations. Best of all, however, they come with no strings attached and will work in the students' interest.

Pete Keenan, the candidate for the ASUM business manager, seems to have been short-changed by your publication. With a full year on the ASUM CB and the budget and finance committee, Pete has the knowledge that is required for the position. Pete, in his actions, has displayed foresight and good judgment and is deserving of the position of ASUM business manager.

Dave Keyes is an independent candidate for the ASUM CB and well-deserving of position. Dave is a hard-worker, and, being independent will work for the students. Dave is deserving of the support of all students voting on the on-campus district.

I support these candidates for the next ASUM government and urge everyone to vote Wednesday, March 2.

Jellison deserves vote

Editor: Your Tuesday non-endorsement editorial quoted vice presidential candidate Paula Jellison's remark that students should vote for "someone you can trust and respect."

I cannot vote, but I can assure you that Paula is a candidate you can trust and respect. She served with distinction on Central Board and on several committees. She faithfully represents student concerns in student government and has been a moving force in ASUM's efforts to garner UM support at the legislature. She is a well-qualified and worthy candidate.

Paula Jellison deserves your support and your vote.

Brennan rebuked

Editor: Regarding the comments made by the student business manager in the Kaimin about a million dollars the ASUM budgeted, and CB member DeSilva's unexcused absences. Few days earlier former CB member Scott Waddell voiced his opinion in the Kaimin and proved some facts to the business manager.

It's a shame when the business manager is unaware of the sum of money they have budgeted, when he has held the post of a business manager for more than six months. Sometimes I wonder if he is worth the fixed salary he is getting.

On the 24th the business manager voiced his opinion again; this time he makes comments about DeSilva's unexcused absences. According to the business manager, DeSilva has not contacted any groups regarding his absences.

Since DeSilva missed one lobbying meeting he should have only contacted the groups who attended that particular meeting. He need not have worried about the missed subcommittee meeting since Mrs. McRae-Zook didn't consider the subcommittee recommendation from the committee DeSilva was in. The respective committee members Tim Smith (Programming), Bruce Barrett (Legal services) and Amy Pfeiffer (Advocate) verified that DeSilva contacted them for the absences.

I wonder whether Mr. Jim Brennan knows what he is talking about. It's funny how a person who talks so irresponsibly tells a Kaimin reporter to be accurate and responsible for their statements.

Vote Bolinger

Editor: While in Helena during Student Lobby Day, I had the opportunity to talk for several hours with ASUM presidential candidate David Bolinger. I had never met him before our meeting, and at the time I did not know he was a candidate for ASUM. In that short time, I was greatly impressed by David's poise and sense of direction. He displayed many qualities of manner and spirit which are essential to the operations of any organization: a respect for opposing views and a willingness to hear them, a sensitivity to the needs of others, and a realization of the limits that an organization can do. While his experience with ASUM may not be as substantial as the other candidates, his extensive background of dealing with people from a leadership position and his maturity far exceed any evident weaknesses. I urge all students to vote David Bolinger for ASUM president.

Thanks — and please vote

Editor: ASUM winter elections will be held Wednesday, March 2, and it appears both students and candidates have expressed more interest and have generated more activity to increase student awareness concerning the elections than in years past. I would like to publically express my appreciation to the Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Conference, ASUM Elections Committee and Phi Eta Sigma for their contributions in arranging forums and debates for the candidates.

As students, we have a right to vote for the candidate of our choice. This is the single most important factor we have at our disposal to insure a quality student government. As you pass by the polling places...UNIVERSITY CENTER, the LODGE CAFETERIA, and LIBERAL ARTS BLDG., ...please take the time to cast your vote. Thank you.

Enough on Ravi

Editor: RAVI! RAVI! RAVI! Is there any end in sight?!

I have just finished reading the sixth piece in the Kaimin that has dealt with the ongoing saga of "Ravi DeSilva meets the Headhunters".

BORING BORING BORING
Have you ever heard of killing a story? Have you ever heard of killing your readers? Can you hear?

Now I know that the DeSilva episode has been your biggest "scoop" of the year; and, as such, deserves stepped up coverage. But, if you must continue pursuing this piece of dry toast so ardently, would you please begin a series of biographies on the leading characters? Who is DeSilva? Who is Jim Flies? Or even, who is Charles F. Mason?

It seems a bit ironic that all of these letters and articles focus on whether or not Ravi has been representing the interests of the students. The little common people. How about the students (and I assure you, we are many in number) who are sick and tired of Ravi DeSilva articles?

ENOUGH ON RAVI I SAY!

Mick Schanilec
Junior, forestry

Editor's note: The number of letters about Ravi DeSilva (or any other topic) is determined by the readers who write them, not by the Kaimin.

Power abused

Editor: I've never seen such a flagrant abuse of power as that used to impeach Ravi DeSilva. I wonder why Ravi was singled out to face impeachment when other CB members have as many absences as he does? (Check the records). I also wonder why those in the audience weren't allowed to speak on Ravi's behalf. I was there and what Marquette McRae-Zook refers to as incoherence by Ravi was perfectly clear and understandable to me. I wish more of Ravi's constituents could have seen the kangaroo trial that took place that night. Since when is a man accused then denied the right to respond to the charges? I suppose it doesn't matter since his words were incoherent to those seeking his removal.

Ravi has done a tremendous job for family housing, a neighborhood crime watch, a youth soccer league and children's movies during finals week are a few examples of his accomplishments. He can be found on Saturdays personally refereeing soccer games from 9 a.m. to noon. How many other CB members put in the hours that Ravi does? Perhaps Jim Flies should answer that one.

It will be a disgrace if we let the irresponsible actions of a few students speak louder than Ravi's accomplishments.

Spurring funds

Editor: The University of Montana SPURS, a service organization for sophomores, are sponsoring Teeter-for-Tots March 4 and 5 at the Fairway Shopping Center and Village Red Lion Motor Inn. The SPURS will be teeter-tottering for twenty-four hours in order to raise funds for a children's respirator at St. Patrick's Hospital and for the Ronald McDonald House located in Billings. This project will greatly benefit many ill children and their families. SPURS are currently collecting pledges within the community and any donations would greatly be appreciated. If you have any questions or would like more information, please contact Janet Freeman, public relations director for SPURS, at 243-2819.

Sophomores. It's still not too late to take Army ROTC.

Because there's a two-year Army ROTC program, in case you missed taking ROTC in your first two years of college.

You'll have to work to catch up, during the summer before your junior year. But in two years you'll earn about $2,900, more than half of which is tax free. Then you'll earn an officer's commission at the same time you earn a college degree. But act soon. Because by the time you're a junior, it'll be too late.

Washington pleases crowd at Grizzly basketball games

By Ann Hennessey
Kaimin Reporter

The chant begins, "Leroy! Leroy! Leroy!"

The basketball crowd urges the coach to put him in the game as Leroy waits restlessly on the edge of the bench.

Finally...it's Leroy Washington, number 14 of the University of Montana Grizzlies.

The shortest man on the UM team, Washington, a substitute guard, stands at 5' 11 1/4", exactly. Washington is usually put in to control the flow of the game because of his ball-handling skills.

And he may be one of the most popular players on the team, according to the crowd.

"He's a real nice guy," said K.C. Abbott, sophomore in Radio-TV and a resident in the same dorm as Washington for two years. "I think he knows everybody. He tries to meet anybody and everybody he can. I don't think there's anyone who doesn't like him."

Center Craig Larsen, senior in geology and co-captain, agreed.

"Leroy's a fun-lovin' kind of guy and easy to like," he said. "He's the kind of guy you feel comfortable with in any type of situation." Larsen added that Washington is a hard-working ball player.

Washington said he loves people, especially children. This shows in the way he patiently autographs programs for children after each game. Because of that love, Washington said, he changed his major from Radio-TV to secondary education, with an emphasis on coaching.

"I just love kids so much," he said. "So many people have worked with me; it's like returning a favor, sort of." Washington said he would like to coach either junior high or high school girls.

Washington is enrolled in a modern dance course at UM this quarter. He said it's the only physical activity he has engaged in besides playing sports with a ball.

"Just say I'm doing well," he said, referring to his dance class.

Basketball has been a part of Washington's life for a long time, though.

"College (basketball) is exciting," Washington said.

"It's a dream in every little kid's eye when they start at seven or eight years old."

College ball was his dream too, Washington said.

An older cousin, who coached many sports, first interested him in basketball.

"He decided I should play at sports," Washington said, so he played football for his cousin. "I guess naturally, since I played football for him, he was going to get me on the basketball court too."

Washington joined the sports world wholeheartedly.

"Whatever season it was, that's the sport I was in," he said.

So, with his mother attending every game and supporting him all the way, Washington played his way through school until high school, when he narrowed down his sports activities to baseball and basketball.

Now he plays intramural softball during the off-season.

Although Washington's high school (Long Beach Polytechnic) basketball team was ranked fourth in the nation his senior year, he said he wasn't recruited as highly as some of his UM teammates. Most of the Grizzlies, he said, were "big studs...top dogs" in high school basketball.

"I'd never even heard of the University of Montana until (Head Coach Mike) Montgomery came down to recruit me," Washington said, adding that Californians think Montana is a state of cowboys. The main reason he chose UM, Washington said, is that Montgomery, who is from Washington's hometown, came down to visit him. The coach assured him that there were some problems with Montana living.

He talked about the cold weather, but Washington said he has adjusted well to his new lifestyle.

"The people are really friendly (in Montana)," Washington said.

He said he's also surprised at how seriously Montana fans take their sports.

"I don't think we (in California) take it as seriously," he said. The fans, he said, are behind the team 100 percent.

Washington smiled and mentioned the Zoo, a bleacher-full of UM students which support the Grizzlies enthusiastically.

"They crack me up," he said. "They just make me laugh so much."

Although it "pumps" him up when he's playing, Washington said he doesn't like it when the crowd starts yelling his name if he's sitting on the bench. He explained that the coach knows when a player should be put in the game.

Washington does play a distinct role in the Grizzly game plan.

"We take advantage of his quickness," Montgomery said. Washington is often played offensively late in the game when quickness is needed, he explained.

Washington is definitely a hit with the crowd, but he prefers not to be around a crowd, he said.

"I'm a loner," he said, quickly adding, "but I'm not alone."

He said he spends a lot of time with his girlfriend.

He likes music; his favorite is jazz. He also listens to soul and some rock 'n' roll, including Supertramp, Journey and Christopher Cross.

The realization of his dream coming true seems to make time fly quickly for Washington.

"One thing I can't believe is that I'm already a sophomore," Washington said. "This season's almost over. Next year I'll be a junior. It seems like I just got out of high school."

Washington emphasizes that, although the crowd may chant his name at every game, he's not a "stud" and doesn't like to be idolized.

"I'm basically Leroy," he said with a shrug.

McRae-Zook to propose increasing student activity fee

By Patricia Tucker
Kaimin Reporter

ASUM President Marquette McRae-Zook will propose to Central Board tonight automatically setting University of Montana student activity fees at about seven percent of tuition costs.

UM students enrolled for more than six credits now pay $18 a quarter, or 6.5 percent of tuition costs, in activity fees.

Under the proposal the fee would increase to $20.50 Fall Quarter, or 6.9 percent of tuition costs, if the Montana Board of Regents holds to its decision in December of hiking full-time tuition $18 a quarter for in-state students and $54 a quarter for out-of-state students.

"I think students have to realize that as the cost of living goes up, ASUM can't stagnate more than any other organization can," McRae-Zook said in an interview with the Kaimin yesterday. "We're not asking for a huge increase by any means."

The increase is necessary, she said, to bring the salaries of ASUM employees up to acceptable levels and to adequately fund ASUM organizations.

Student employees are exploited because of the low salaries they receive, she said. McRae-Zook called her salary of $325 a month "a pittance." She believes a salary of $400 would be more appropriate, considering she averages 35 hours of work a week, she said.

The salary of the Kaimin editor, also an ASUM employee, is the same as the president's, and program coordinators are paid $150 a month. McRae-Zook said the editor also should make $400 a month, and the coordinators $200 a month.

ASUM also pays 14 state employees, such as the ASUM secretary, an accountant and the attorney for ASUM Legal Services, at a cost of about $103,000 during 1982. It also employs work-study and non-work-study students.

Besides paying for salaries, ASUM also funds more than 50 student groups ranging from ASUM Day Care to the Handicapped Student Union.

McRae-Zook said the increase in the student activity fees is needed to maintain the quality of the programs as their costs increase.

The increase would generate a total of about $42,000 a year. McRae-Zook said the additional money could be used to fund needed new student services like a shop for bicycles and cars.

She said the advantages of the automatic increase are that each increase would be gradual and students would not have to go to the regents every time they wanted a fee increase. The automatic increase would not mean "taxation without representation," she said, because CB and the regents must approve the proposal.

"I guess we're going on the premise that government representatives vote to increase taxes when the cost of living goes up, and in ASUM's case, we want to raise taxes when the cost of entertainment and services goes up," she said.

If the regents approve tuition hikes when ASUM's costs do not also rise, CB could vote to refund to students some of the fee, she added.

"I don't think there's a single student on this campus who can't afford the $2.50 per quarter in exchange for the services they're getting," she continued. Students are getting their money's worth in yearly fees if they make one visit to ASUM Legal Services, for example, she said.

McRae-Zook, who has only two more weeks left to her term as president, said she will present the proposal to the regents at their Friday meeting in Helena if CB approves the measure. She said she is committed to raising more money for ASUM.

The last time the regents approved an ASUM activity fee increase was a $3 increase in 1980.

Money problems force sorority onto real estate market

By Dan Carter
Kaimin Reporter

There is a for sale sign in front of the University of Montana Sigma Kappa sorority house.

The large colonial-style house, located at 201 University Ave., was closed down by its national chapter and alumni last year for financial reasons. No one lives there now except a caretaker.

The real estate advertisement in the papers might read something like this: For sale, one very large house, 10 bedrooms, four bathrooms, full attic and basement, dining room, living room, and large kitchen. Close to UM.

Paula Jellison, member of the defunct sorority, said that while the decision was made by the national chapter of Sigma Kappa, the women living in the house at the time didn't like it.

"We made noises when they wanted to close, and there were some hurt feelings involved," Jellison said in an interview yesterday. "But I understand their decision."

Jellison said the decision was made on the basis that the sorority was in financial trouble. She said at the time the decision was made to close the sorority there were only 10 or 12 women living in the house, and therefore the finances needed to take care of the house were not being met. She added that Sigma Kappa is "the third or fourth largest" sorority nationwide.

The women of Sigma Kappa had no choice in the matter, Jellison said, and they fought the decision, but their efforts were fruitless. However, all members did receive alumni status when the doors closed last August.

"I wish they didn't have to do it," she said. "I sure do miss it."

Therese Clark, new president of Panhellenic, the governing body that promotes sororities to the university and the community, said Panhellenic has no jurisdiction in the sale of the house. She said the sale will be handled by the national chapter of Sigma Kappa.

Clark said that closing the house down was a disappointment, but she said she could understand the reasons.

Clark said because of the lack of members in Sigma Kappa, she could understand the decision. Clark is a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, which has about 40 women living in its house.

The potential of other houses closing doesn't worry Clark, she said, because as UM's enrollment increases so does the number of "rushees", or women looking for a sorority to join.

Clark said some sororities and fraternities might be interested in buying the house, but she hasn't heard of any serious buyers yet. Trail Realty Inc. is offering the property.

Foreign students in debt to American universities

(CPS) — A seemingly obscure January meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) has started to have devastating effects on foreign students on U.S. campuses, and is affecting the treasuries of the colleges themselves.

Students from several countries that depend on income from their oil industries — Nigeria, Mexico, and Venezuela in particular — are now falling behind on their tuition payments to U.S. colleges, and in some cases are even being forced to transfer and drop out of school altogether.

Tuition bills "have been piling up particularly since August, 1982" at various schools, reported Georgia Stewart of the National Association of Foreign Student Affairs (NAFSA) in Washington, D.C.

Nigerian students, who seem to be the hardest hit so far, owe the University of Minnesota $60,000 to $80,000, for example.

Other schools haven't totaled the amounts owed them, but said the problem has reached crisis proportions.

An unspecified number of foreign students have had to drop out of Boston University, which has the fifth highest concentration of foreign students in the U.S., according to BU administrator Jane Elish Andrews.

The monetary crisis has "caused students to leave the dormitory, finding cheaper housing off campus," she said.

A number of Nigerian students at the University of Pittsburgh have transferred to nearby, cheaper Robert Morris College, reported Ralph Morrison, Pitt's international students director.

Others have had to drop out. Some of those who remain have moved into "substandard" housing off campus, he said.

At the University of Texas, another university with a high concentration of foreign students, Joe Neal reported that "the ones who are feeling the pinch drastically are Mexican, and they're going home."

Texas lost 150 Mexican students last fall to the then-emerging international financial crisis.

The world economy has been shaken almost yearly since the original Arab oil boycott of 1973, driving many marginally-developed countries to the brink of financial collapse.

In the last two years, an international oil glut has also depressed the revenues of many oil-producing countries. Some of the oil states that bet heavily on using future revenues from $34-a-barrel oil to finance current lavish spending programs — Mexico and Nigeria were the heaviest bettors — have been hurt badly by the gradual decline of oil prices caused by the glut.

Crude oil in many places is now selling for $30 a barrel, with scattered reports of $28-a-barrel oil available in some places.

To remedy the problem, OPEC members met in Geneva in January to cut back on production. They aimed to dry up the oil glut, and keep prices up in the $32-a-barrel range. But the meeting broke up when the countries couldn't decide which nations would cut back oil production by how much.

World news

THE WORLD

•The Italian government is investigating the Turk who shot John Paul II, his accused Bulgarian accomplice and an Italian labor leader of allegedly plotting to assassinate Polish Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, national news reports said. The AGI agency, quoting unidentified officials, said Monday the would-be assassins planned to put a powerful bomb under a car in which Walesa was to ride during his visit to Rome in January 1981. It was not immediately clear why the plot was not carried out.

THE NATION

•Smith College said yesterday it will give an honorary degree to Jeane Kirkpatrick even though the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations won't be at May graduation to receive it. Kirkpatrick announced last week she would not attend. Some seniors and professors at Smith, a private women's college in Northampton, Mass., had protested Kirkpatrick's appearance because of her support of the government of El Salvador. Students said they would stage a protest. Smith spokeswoman Ann Shenhan said trustees had reaffirmed their intention to award Kirkpatrick the doctor of laws degree.

•The House voted 301-87 yesterday to create an American Conservation Corps aimed at providing 100,000 full-time and summer jobs for young people in national forests and inner-city parks. Opposed by President Reagan, the program is a direct descendant of the Civilian Conservation Corps of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, and is intended to ease high unemployment among low-income youths in the cities. The bill has an uncertain fate in the Senate.

MONTANA

•A food bank for needy people in Bozeman served nearly 1,500 people during its first year of operation, but officials say still more people were eligible for the food baskets. Mareen Healy, a VISTA volunteer with the Human Resource Development Council in Bozeman, said 5,100 people in the county are at or below federal poverty guidelines.
